

ABSTRACT

Open Pairings occurring during airline operations are repaired n at a time (where n is an integer) in near real time through use of two solution paths, one involving one-way
5 fixes, and the other matching transformations. From the resulting multiple solutions, one is selected which is of least cost to the airline.

Accepted for publication